Artists Give Portraits Free to The Soldier or Sailor Hospital Cases.

NEW YORK. — On the walls of many a modern American home there hang original portraits of G.I. Joes by famous artists whose work ordinarily would command impressive prices. However, these portraits cost their possessors nothing. They were given free to the soldier or sailor sitters, as part of the contribution which American artists generally have been making to the war effort, says the Chicago Herald-American.

The "studios" for this particular art movement are army and navy hospitals and the models are wounded veterans to whom the experience comes as a welcome break in the tedium of convalescence.

Sponsored both by the Red Cross and USO-Camp shows, the experiment has proven to be a singularly effective morale builder.

Many of the artist volunteers are nationally famous. Others are relatively unknown. But, noted or obscure, they get an equally cordial reception from their soldier clientele.

Typical Art Session.

Typical of these hospital art sessions was a recent one in a traction ward of the army's Halloran general hospital, Staten Island, N. Y.

Wielding brush and pencil were Dean Cornwell, famous muralist; Dan Content, noted magazine artist; and Paul Trebitsch of King Features syndicate, whose newspaper and magazine illustrations are familiar to a host of readers.

On the same day, patients at Mason general hospital, Brentwood, N. Y., sat for portraits by Arthur William Brown, president of the Society of Illustrators, Roy Proksha, equally noted as an illustrator; and Bettina Steinke, portrait painter.

The resultant sketches, autographed by the artists, were given to the models. All said they would send theirs "home to the folks." As an additional service, the Red Cross and USO-Camp shows make photographic replicas of the portraits, which the subjects can distribute among friends.

Subjects at Halloran included army casualties, Erwin H. Becker, 19-year-old infantry private from the Bronx, N. Y.; Cpl. Edgar G. Steinecke, 28, of Scranton, Pa., and T/Sgt. John F. Kraus, 31, of Brooklyn.

Patients Interested.

Becker's leg was fractured by shrapnel after he crossed the Rhine, and he was dragged to safety by medical corps men.

A blast of mortar fire hit Steinecke in both legs as he advanced with fellow infantrymen in the Rhineland.

Nazi machine gun bullets tore into both Kraus' legs during the "Battle of the Bulge."

All these men have been hospital patients for long and painful months, their wounded limbs immobilized in casts.

Dinner was over, and ordinarily they would have faced three more hours of hospital tedium until lights out.

The arrival of the artists converted those three hours into a high spot of pleasure.

No model was interested in just his own portrait; he wanted to see those of his buddies. There was a lot of ribbing back and forth—remarks like, "Say, he's got you almost as ugly as you are!" and "Look, don't make Ed that handsome—his folks won't know him."

The faces of the patients were bright and interested, as contrasted with apathy shortly before, and they grinned their satisfaction as they received their own portraits.

German Parties at Meet Vow to Redeem Nation

BERLIN. — Spokesmen for Berlin's four political parties in their first public "united front" meeting recently said the German people would endeavor earnestly to fulfill the terms of the Potsdam declaration. Some 500 representatives of the four parties unanimously supported a resolution offered by Trade Union Representative Ernst Lemmer which:

Called for a continuation of the united front to achieve Germany's regeneration; acknowledged Germany's collective guilt for the Hitler regime; pledged elimination of militarism, reactionarism and Nazism; admonished the nation that the going will be hard, and pledged an honest attempt to fulfill the spirit and letter of the Potsdam decisions of the Big Three.

Wilhelm Kuelz, minister of the interior in the Weimar republic, presided and termed the four political parties "the educators of the nation for democracy."
